Are you taking regular prescription medication for rheumatoid arthritis?

Do you still have sore and swollen joints?

If the answer to these questions is yes, you may be eligible to participate in a clinical research trial looking at an investigational treatment for rheumatoid arthritis (RA).

The clinical trial will last 15½ months. During the first 12 months, there will be weekly visits with a team of experienced doctors and nurses who will assess your symptoms, monitor your health, and provide advice on future treatment options. Trial-related assessments and trial drug will be provided at no cost.

You might be able to participate in the clinical trial if you:

- are between the ages of 18 and 75
- have been diagnosed with RA
- have active RA (a flare-up), with more than five tender and five swollen joints
- have active RA, despite receiving previous treatment with an anti-TNF-α therapy
- are currently taking methotrexate prescribed by your doctor.
